Track Team Upsets Dope and Cornell

SCORES 70 1/3-TO-64 2/3 VICTORY OVER ITHACANS WHEN MANY COMPETITORS OUTDO THEMSELVES IN CLOSELY CONTESTED MEET

BY CHARLES R. ERDMAN, JR., '19

LAST Saturday the track team scored one of the biggest upsets in recent years when it defeated Cornell in the Palmer Stadium by the score of 70 1/3 to 64 2/3. Prior to Saturday's meeting the Cornell team had been undefeated and in addition carried the prestige of intercollegiate indoor champions by virtue of their victory in the I.C.A.A.A. Championships last March. Only the most enthusiastic optimist would have been so bold as to predict victory for Princeton, and the past records of the two teams pointed to an easy victory for the team from Ithaca. On performance Cornell was conceded all three places in the shot, hammer, and discus, and had it not been for the fact that two young Princeton Sophomores bettered by many feet their best previous efforts in competition Cornell would have had little difficulty in winning the meet. However, Bill Moore 1930, the football tackle, came through with a throw of 157 feet in the hammer, the last event of the day, winning second place by two inches over Worden of Cornell, and thereby clinching the meet for his team. A few moments earlier J. H. Maroney 1930 threw the discus 127 feet, which surpassed by ten feet his best previous record. This throw was good for second place and a decided upset of the "dope." These two instances but typify what was true in every event when man after man surpassed his previous best effort, and thereby hangs the explanation for the team's well-won victory.

Princeton captured eight first places to seven for Cornell, and that was the approximate ratio of the final score. There were three double winners during the afternoon. Barron Rockwell 1928 turned in two excellent races in the dashes, while Caruthers of Cornell placed first in both hurdle events, and Anderson, his teammate, won both the shot and the discus. Despite a rather slow track, made heavy by the recent rains, the times were excellent in most all the events, particularly in the high hurdles, the mile, and the two mile.

The best races of the day were those which occurred first on the program, the mile and the high hurdles. In the former event, Johnny Gore 1929 and Benson, Cornell's intercollegiate two-mile champion, raced stride for stride, for the last two laps. At the final straightaway Benson made a great bid to pass Gore, who had been the pacemaker throughout, but his effort was met by a beautiful sprint which sent Gore across the line with a two-yard advantage, in 4 minutes 26 3/5 seconds, very fast time in view of the condition of the track. As was expected, the duel between Captain Jadwin 1928 and Caruthers of Cornell was a race well worth the trip from New York on the Pennsylvania. At no time during the course of the race was either runner more than six inches in the van. Captain Jadwin had that much of an advantage as they cleared the final hurdle, but was nipped by the Cornell man on the "run in" and lost by an even smaller margin.

One of the most noteworthy performances of the day, if it is at all possible to distinguish any one effort from the rest, was that of J. W. Lincoln 1930. This man, who has been made over from a sprinter to a low hurdler by Keene Fitzpatrick and Archie Hahn, failed to qualify in his first heat in the low hurdles, was forced to run again in a special heat for third-place winners in the trial heats, and then, after two hard races, came back in the final heat to push Caruthers closely for first, scoring what the writer considers a phenomenal second place.

B. V. D. Hedges, Jr., 1930 placed in more events than any other man on the field. This sterling fancy diver won the high jump at 6 feet, placed second in the pole vault by clearing 12 feet, won his heat in the hurdles in 15 3/5 seconds, and was a close third in the finals. He then finished his afternoon's work-out by giving by far the most consistent performance of any competitor in the broad-jump. Of his six jumps five were between 21 feet 8 1/2 inches and 22 feet, and the sixth, a foul, was over 22 feet. His jump of 22 feet, less 1-16 of an inch, scored third in the event, but on total distance jumped he would have been an easy winner!

Keene Fitzpatrick and Archie Hahn cannot be given too much credit for the performance of the track team last Saturday. The material this year with which they had to work was the weakest since the War, and it is little less than miraculous that they were able to produce a dual meet team which defeated Cornell. As an example of what they had to contend with there might be mentioned the development of a discus thrower. Maroney, who scored the needed second in this event with the creditable throwing of 127 feet, was a pole vaulter and a star "tumbler" on the gym team, but who would have picked him for a discus thrower but Keene Fitzpatrick and Archie Hahn in desperate need of a weight man? Lincoln in the low hurdles is another example of the methods which were necessary in the production of the near-miracle of last Saturday.

The summaries:

Shot put—Won by Anderson, Cornell; Levy, Cornell, second; Wickham, Cornell, third. Distance, 45 feet 9 1/2 inches.
Javelin throw—Won by Healey, Princeton; Worden, Cornell, second; Weis, Cornell, third.
Distance, 188 feet 6 1/2 inches.
Mile run—Won by Gore, Princeton; Benson, Cornell, second; McKaig, Cornell, third. Time, 4:26 3/5.
440-yard dash—Won by Ashley, Princeton; Treman, Cornell, second; Carey, Princeton, third. Time, 0:51 2/5.
120-yard high hurdles—Won by Caruthers, Cornell; Jadwin, Princeton, second; Hedges, Princeton, third. Time, 0:15 1/5.
100-yard dash—Won by Rockwell, Princeton; Heekin, Cornell, second; Rhodes, Cornell, third. Time, 0:10 1/5.
Two-mile run—Won by Welles, Princeton; Levering, Cornell, second; Slade, Princeton, third. Time, 9:47 4/5.
Pole vault—Won by Williams, Cornell; Hedges,
